

Schools' charity work helps raise more than £6K

Staff and students at Sacred Heart Catholic College, St Edmund's & St Thomas', Great Crosby and Ursuline have helped raise more than £6,000 for two local charities.

The fundraising activities has seen pupils, teachers, family members and friends come together to show their support towards St Joseph's Hospice and Aintree University Hospitals NHS Foundation Trust during these difficult times.

Activities have covered all ends of the spectrum, from showing artistic support to the NHS, to more energetic exploits such as walking, running and cycling.

Speaking on Radio Merseyside, Mr Walker said: "We are delighted to be able to help at these moments of great need.

"We are all acutely conscious of the conditions the brilliant Hospice team have to work in and our group of schools wants to play its part in doing everything possible to help.

Together

"Staff, parents and pupils at Ursuline, Great Crosby, St Edmund's and St Thomas' and Sacred Heart are all used to working together and this really feels like the right way to play our part at the moment.

"Supported by their families, pupils have been raising funds in lots of different ways and parents and staff have also rallied round by taking part in quizzes and online activities."

Meanwhile, Maxine Armstrong, Head of Fundraising at St Joseph's Hospice, said: "These are truly inspiring young people who have completed some incredible challenges for which they should all be extremely proud."

"We'd like to thank them all, on behalf of our staff, patients and their families, for supporting the Hospice at what is a really challenging time."

All money raised will be split between the two charities.

Year 7 artists see Tula Moon rising

Our Year 7 artists have been brushing up on their homework by producing some stunning work during lockdown. The budding Banksys have been seeking inspiration a little closer to home by creating artwork in the Tula Moon style. Tula Moon is the creation of designer/illustrator Steph Dekker from Liverpool. Since 2010, Steph has been creating a UK and worldwide brand featuring iconic landmark buildings rendered in her unique colourful and highly detailed style. This recognisable look has gone on to define her brand and is one our students have clearly enjoyed replicating. Art teacher, Miss Burke, praised their work, saying: "The work our Year 7s are producing is fantastic and I could not be happier. Well done Year 7."
